

Seventeen Deaths in Hospitals

Seventeen deaths took place yesterday and last night in city hospitals from Spanish influenza. Upon a comparison of the fatalities from the disease daily since its outbreak from this source it would seem that the epidemic has not abated.

Mr. Harry Tomlin, Superintendent of the Western Hospital, who has been at his post until midnight each day interesting himself personally in each case as it is admitted, says that he does not think that there is evidence of relief from the disease. Several physicians on the staff of the hospitals reported that there had been a decrease in the number of calls for their services.

The report from each hospital is as follows:
