

NEITHER FORGIVE NOR FORGET.

Halifax Chronicle:—The human tendency to "forget and forgive" is usually commendable, but not always. There are times when it is wisdom and a duty to remember. Very often what is called forgiving is merely forgetting. With their habitual base cunning, Germans have founded a principle of action for themselves on this tendency. All crimes in war are justifiable, they proclaim, if only they are successful, because mankind so soon forgets in his readiness to acclaim the victory. This maxim of theirs should not be forgotten, whatever else may be. Its consequences have been too "frightful."
