

Nine Deaths From Spanish Influenza

There were nine deaths from "Spanish influenza" in the city hospitals yesterday. At the Toronto General Hospital there were two deaths, Lum Chung, 481 Yonge street, and John Stewart of 12 Charles street east, being the victims of the epidemic. John Hare, 155 De Grassi street and Edward Gohl of 193 Church street died from the epidemic at St. Michael's Hospital. There were two deaths at the Base Hospital, and three at the Western Hospital.

All the hospitals are filled, and some cannot take any more cases. At the Base Hospital there are a lot of very sick boys, according to an officer in charge. A few new cases were admitted to the General Hospital, but it is filled up. A few were taken at St. Michael's hospital, but it was stated last evening that they could take no more. Grace Hospital also reports no more room. No deaths were reported from the Hospital for Sick Children, which is overcrowded. About 40 new cases were admitted to the Base Hospital yesterday.
